The stories documented here exclusively concern those who have been forced to live in segregated conditions in the FRG. Most have travelled to Europe by life-threatening routes and without state permission. They are also not welcome in Germany, as elsewhere, given the State's deliberate legal strategy prioritising expulsion

They have fled wars, terror, hunger, and persecution, hoping to find protection and live in safety in Germany. They are asylum seekers, rejected asylum seekers, undocumented persons and those awaiting deportation.

Special laws apply in Germany, especially for refugees, the implementation and application of which repeatedly leads to human rights violations, criminalisation, oppression and isolation. What ensues is structural violence against those impacted- on the part of the State and society. The direction has been set: by the laws, by the officials implementing them, by the racist street mob - the Nazis are yelling it out.

Those impacted have not only been traumatised in their country of origin or along the life-threatening escape routes, the terror continues in Germany: in the camps, in the hands of the authorities, in the deportation jails and on the streets. Fully defenceless in a racist system, how can those affected expect to recover mentally and physically?

Between 2016 and 2021, 215 people died by suicide: that means that on average three people died per month. Suicide attempts and self-harm were documented in a total of 3085 cases, or 43 people per month. Over the same period, eleven people died as a result of direct police violence and twelve as a result of failure to render assistance. It must be assumed that the number of unreported cases is much higher.
